On Windows 7, JVM interferes with my work by bringing up the UAC request at random times when it notices that it needs updating. I can see how this nagging makes sense, so I enter the admin password and expect it to update itself like any other software that does this. Instead, it only brings up the balloon in the area of notification The new update is available. (Why does UAC need it?!) So I click on the character to start the update, which immediately brings up the dialog box saying the update failed without further explanation. The whole game is repeated from scratch every time I reboot the computer. At some point I give up, log in as an administrator and update from there. But I find the farce unnecessary and nervous. Is there a way to make the upgrade process easy (ish)? If not Firefox-how easy, at least Adobe Reader-how easy? It recently happened to me that I was stuck at work on installing Windows without access to admin privileges. Although I could use a bunch of portable apps I couldn't find a portable JDK. To get a portable JDK without admin privileges in Windows, you have to follow three simple steps. Listen to relaxing music while reading my blog1. Download Oracle's JDK (e.g. JDK 8 8u111).2. ExtractIf you want to use the x86 version, just open the .exe file with 7-zip. It contains a single tool.zip file that contains all the files we need. For x64 tools.zip, you can find in the -rsrc-1033-JAVA_CAB10'111' extract tools.zip to the desired JDK catalog (e.g. D: JavaJDK). here you go man, good luck. It worked for me. 1 Insert a portable USB drive into your home computer's USB slot. 2 On your home computer, click on download Java JDK in the resources section. 3 Tap the red download button. When you log in, click skip this step. Click Save the File to upload the file to your computer. 4 Double-click the .exe file you downloaded to start the master setup for Java SE 6. Click the Accept button to the License Agreement. 5 On the customization page, click on small hard drive buttons next to Source, Public JRE, and Java DB, and for every choice, don't install this feature now. 6 Click Change... Button in the bottom right corner, then from the drop down menu, under Look in: Choose a portable usb drive. Click Create a new folder in the top right corner (folder icon) and name the new JDK folder. Choose the JDK folder and click THE Good. 7 Click Next and wait until Java installs. 8 Open notebook, thord on Start, Programs, Accessories Notebook. 9 In Notepad, copy-paste the following two-line batch script: install Path%'d0'JDK'bin;%PATH% cmd 10 Click File, Save how, go on USB drive root catalog, and notify RunMeForJava.bat as the name of your file and click Save. 11 Insert a USB drive into your computer where you don't have an administrator and double-click .bat in the ROOT USB catalog. The team window will open. Javac (no quotes) to see java running and fully installed. Does anyone know about the qIP file or something out there that I can use to install JDK on my flash drive? I don't have admin rights here. Tried to look for one, but could not find anything. No shenanigans, just want to know how to code Java.Page 2 21 comments I found the basic idea here, exact steps: Install Portable 7zip Download Oracle JDK Installer for Windows (A.Ex) Running 7-SipPortable.exe from your Portable 7zip In 7zip find and right click jdk install exe file from the context of the menu use 7-sip - Open, and then extract now extract as a result tools.zip into the folder that writhes for you Open cmd.exe CD in the folder and perform this: for /R %f in (*. Pack) do %cd%bin'unpack200 -r-v-l %f %pf%'nf.jar Kudos Nick Rusler to figure out this difficult unpack 200 command line!
